Women in Siam.

"The Great Mother of War," a title most suggestive to mothers-in-law, is the rank corresponding to our major general among the women soldiers of Siam. Her figure, face, and expression, as represented in a photograph, is by no means fearful to behold, although, being dark and Asian, it is not so beautiful in the eyes of a European as the face of Joan of Arc, who was also a "great mother of war." If a little peasant girl of Lorraine could lead an army of six thousand riflemen to victory, and crown Charles VII. King of France, why may not a woman of to-day command a regiment of men or women in Bangkok?

The King of Siam has a body guard of five hundred women, and there are many other Amazons in his dominions. They go through the drill the same as our State militia or National Guard, and march through the streets of the capital of Siam to the music of the drum and life. Whether, in marching to war, the band ever plays "The Girl I Left Behind Me," is a matter of some doubt. Imagine the feelings of an American paterfamilias as he stands upon the piazza waving an adieu to his wife, who has been ordered to the "front." And yet such domestic partings, such stripping of the vines from the oaks, is not uncommon in Siam. The women soldiers of that remarkable land are allowed to marry. If any of the privates form an attachment for a man, they report the fact to the officer in command, and if she thinks the connection a suitable one she gives her consent. If, subsequently, maternal duties require their presence at home, a leave of absence is granted; this proceeding excites no more comment than the allowing a man to go on his summer vacation in the United States. The Siamese do some things differently from us, but quite as well, perhaps.

The costume of the "Great Mother of War" is by no means an ugly one; it even looks better than the American Bloomer. In general appearance it resembles that worn by the Scotch Highlander. Indeed, the Scotch are said to have borrowed their peculiar national dress from the Siamese, for it has been worn in the latter country for hundreds of years. Thus we see again illustrated the truth of the saying that all history tends to the mysterious East. More of the civilization of the West comes from the East than most Christians are willing to acknowledge. That which is old in Asia becomes new to Europe.

A description of the dress worn by these Siamese Amazons is as follows: The feet are covered with well-fitting, American-looking shoes; stockings of red and black checks are worn, coming above the knee. These are made out of some woven material, as the art of knitting stockings has not yet been discovered in Siam. A plaid skirt falls just below the knee. A leather belt is worn around the waist, to which the sword is attached. American women, more peacefully inclined, attached bags, parasols, and ornaments to their belts. The jackets are close-fitting to the form, with a row of buttons in front; the sleeve is a coat-sleeve, so called with a cuff turned back, ornamented with gold lace and buttons. In the neck of the jacket there is a short standing collar, and a sash neck-tie, fastened in a sailor's knot, completes the dress. A sash is worn after the manner of our baldricks, and the decorations are placed on the left breast. The cap is a three-cornered one, resembling those worn by Catholic priests, with white ostrich plumes. In actual war they carry shields and breast plates made of leather sewed all over with steel buttons. They use rifles as well as swords. It is the testimony of those who have had the opportunity to become familiar with the military establishment of Siam that the women soldiers are far more trustworthy and moral than the men. Possibly that is the reason the king keeps them to guard the gates of his palace.—Home Journal.

CAUGHT BY A BOA CONSTRUCTOR.—After breakfast we started for the lagoon. We had set our hearts on seeing Manatee—"sea-cows"—which are still not uncommon on the coast of Trinidad, though they have been exterminated through the rest of the West Indies since the days of Pore Jahat. The good missionary speaks of them in his delightful journal as already rare in the year 1693; and now, as far as I am aware, none are to be found north of Trinidad and the Spanish Main, save a few round Cuba and Japan. We were anxious, too, to see, if not get a boa constrictor of one kind or other, for there are two kinds in the island, which may be seen alive in the Zoological Gardens in the same cage.

The true boa, which is here called Mahajuel, is striped as well as spotted with two patterns, one over the other. The Huilla, anasana, or water boa, bears only a few round spots. Both are fond of the water, and to a very large size, and both are dangerous—especially to children and small animals. That there were Huillas about the place, possibly within fifty yards of the house, there was no doubt. One of our party had seen with his own eyes one twenty-seven feet long killed, with a whole kid inside of it, only a few miles off.

The brown policeman, crossing an arm of Guapapo only a month or two before, had been frightened by meeting one in the ford, which his excited imagination magnified so much that its head was on one bank while its tail was on the other—measurement which must, I think, be divided at least by three. But in the very spot where we stood, some four years since, happened what might have been a painful tragedy. For young ladies, whose names were mentioned to me, preferred, not wisely, to bathe in the still lagoon to one in the surf outside, and as they departed themselves one of them and her sister were playing tricks, she called out to her to let her alone; and, looking up, saw to her astonishment, her three sisters sitting on the bank and herself alone. She looked back and shrieked for help, and only just in time, for the Huilla dashed to her assistance. The brute had got hold not of her little body, but of her bathing dress, and held on stupidly. The girls pulled; the bathing dress, which was lucky of this cotton, was torn off; the Huilla still clung with it in his mouth into the dark labyrinth of the mangrove roots, and the girl was saved. Two minutes' delay and the girl would have been round her, and all would have been over.—Kingsley's West Indies.
